A Perfect Place

for meetings & gatherings

The Florence Griswold Museum is pleased to announce the availability of the John and Dyanne Rafal Landscape Center for your meetings, lectures, workshops, and gatherings.

A historic 19th century barn in the center of the Florence Griswold Museum's campus in Old Lyme, Connecticut has been transformed into a space for discovery. The barn features an exhibition that highlights the history and significance of the region's landscape.

Your gathering will be held in the very setting that inspired a generation of artists.

The exhibit features a silent film from the 1920s and reproductions of historic photographs to convey the openness of the local landscape that once existed when artists from all over America visited the area.

In addition, the building includes program space for workshops, meetings, and lectures for your group's special gathering. A docent lead tour of the historic gardens is also available. Breakfast, lunch, and snacks can be provided by one of our catering partners.
